A Book of Surpassing Timeliness

What's wanted? A popular and live presentation of the condition of Europe today, with some indication of whither she is tending. There is an unlimited field for such a book and here it is,—timely, popular, full of information.

EUROPE— WHITHER BOUND?

By STEPHEN GRAHAM

Author of "A Vagabond in the Caucasus," "The Way of Martha and the Way of Mary," etc.

The author is preeminently the man to feel the pulse of Europe, and record the facts. Shrewd minded, with the keenest eyes, he has made a tour of all the capitals of Europe, talking to those in power, talking to the man in the street. His book offers an exact and wonderfully readable picture of what everyone wants to know, "Europe, Whither Bound?"

Dr. Frank Crane

In the New York Globe says:

"IT is pleasant to meet some one whose convictions and tastes run in harmony with your own.

"It is quite as pleasant to find a book which states in cold type the same ideas that you have been believing and expressing all along. Such a book is one in a hundred.

"Such a book for me is

BASIL KING'S The Conquest of Fear

"In the first place it is a book about spiritual things and yet characterized by perfectly clear common sense, which is extremely unusual.

"Every human being is engaged every day of his life in thinking of these things one way or another, yet books of practical value on this subject are as scarce as hens' teeth.

"Most 'spiritual' books are useful only to members of a small cult and are practically useless for general reading and for ordinary people, because they are tied up to some sect and are full of worn-out phrases, from which the juice of practicality has long since been dried out.

"King's book is fresh and sane. It will be helpful to anyone who reads it with an open mind, no matter what his religion or irreligion may be.

"It has no propaganda except what is intimated by its title. How to get rid of fear.

"On this King makes one point of enormous value; for he tells us why fear exists.

"Fear is the Life-Principle.

"It is given to mortals to stimulate them to power.

"This idea, and others which it brings with it, Mr. King works out very practically. I wish I had space to mention the very good and sensible points he makes.

"Whoever will read this book carefully and be guided by it, can hardly fail to get a vastly more practical and intelligent notion of life itself of the Diety that controls it, and of how to use that Diety."

Booksellers know

Dr. Frank Crane's editorials are syndicated to many newspapers throughout the country. Certainly, in view of this universal appeal, the praise he gives this book is good advertising that will result in good business. If you are a bookseller at heart, you will realize this—and help yourself.

TO THE LAST MAN

by Zane Grey

Author of "The Mysterious Rider,"

"The Man of the Forest," etc.

Publication Date, January 5th, 1922

ONCE again the famous author brings his big American public the thing it likes and demands in fiction—a story that is a clean, authentic picture of the great West and is peopled with strong characters.

To The Last Man is a story you won't have to "sell"; people will simply buy it. It is the stirring tale of a man and a girl who—madly in love—found themselves in the thick of a relentless feud—a feud fought desperately, doggedly, to the last man. This vivid drama of the West will bring to your customers the kind of satisfaction which makes them "sell" the book to their friends.

Millions of Zane Grey's books have been sold. Some of the most popular and most widely circulated moving pictures of to-day are adaptations of Zane Grey's novels. So there are more "fans" than ever waiting for the "new Zane Grey."

Don't wait another day to place a generous order on To The Last Man. Have enough stock in your store on publication date. A new Zane Grey in January makes an otherwise dull season profitable. Order now. Illustrated, $2.00

about Peter B. Kyne's "Go-Getter."*

Let the most prominent business man in your community read a copy of "The Go-Getter." What he says about the book will make a wonderful window display for you.

When we published this inspirational business story as an addition to our regular list three months ago, we knew it would do well, but we had no idea what a sensational success it was destined to score. It is proving a record-breaker, and it is gathering increased momentum every month.

Its editions have been absorbed almost before they came from the press. To date it has sold 40,000 and business men everywhere are talking about it as they have talked of no book since the immortal "Message to Garcia."

The first of the year, when everybody is resolved to become a "go-getter," is the time to display this fast-moving title.

YOU CAN'T GO WRONG ON A COSMOPOLITAN BOOK

A Famous Doctor Prescribes it

HEARING that a famous nerve specialist and professor of neuropsychiatry in a well-known medicine college was, in the regular course of his practice, writing prescriptions addressed to a local bookstore each calling for "1 copy Outwitting Our Nerves," we wrote to ask if we might use that fact in advertising the book. Following is part of his letter in reply:

"I should hardly dare to tell you how many copies of this book I have sold. I think it would be well over one hundred by this time. It is one of the most delightfully satisfactory books that has reached me in a long time, and has been of inestimable value and assistance to me in the treatment of the type of cases with which it deals. The authors (and I have really looked into their personal histories) should feel well repaid for their efforts if they could only know of the real benefit and help which they have been, not only to laymen but to their professional associates. . . . Please express to the authors, if you have an opportunity, my keen appreciation of their splendid work."

(And we have heard of a good many more of the medical profession who are enthusiastically pushing the book.)

A Famous Literary Editor Recommends it

He says, in The New York Herald: "We don't know why we like 'Outwitting Our Nerves.' We oughtn't to. It exposes us as a faker. It laughs at all of our pet symptoms. It ridicules our insomnia. It refuses to take our favorite aches and pains seriously. We don't like this. A year or so ago we read a book (we've forgotten the title) which sought to prove that most of the great geniuses of the past have been sickly guys and we found consolation in the thought that the pains that regularly shoot through us might be an indication that we are a genius. 'Outwitting Our Nerves' contends that we are a bluffer, that as soon as we stop coddling ourself like a king we'll be all right again—and we are afraid the book is right."

"It is disturbing to think that we no longer have cause to think we are a genius. But we find comfort in the thought that it is better to be a healthy boob than a sick genius."

"'Outwitting Our Nerves,' is that rare thing, a sound scientific work chattily written."

"Outwitting Our Nerves," by Jackson and Salisbury, is now in its sixth printing. It has been on the best-selling non-fiction list for months. It will keep on. There is no risk and a great deal of convenience in stocking it liberally.— The Century Co., 353 Fourth Ave., New York City.

Render Book Service — It Pays

R. R. BOWKER CO., 60-62 W. 45th St., NEW YORK

To the Booksellers of the United States:

WE take this opportunity of expressing our sincere gratitude and thanks for the courtesies extended to this house during the year just passed. More firmly than ever are we wedded to the belief that the interests of the bookseller and the book publisher are identical, and that it is only by close cooperation that these interests can be fully conserved.

Despite seemingly adverse conditions, we take pardonable pride in announcing that the year 1921 was one of the best in the history of this business.

We attribute this to the friendly attitude of the retail bookseller, to a ripened experience and judgment in the selection of authors and books accepted for publication, and to the high efficiency of our organization in general.

In this connection, we feel justified in calling particular attention to our shipping department. Keeping in stock in New York at all times a complete line of our books, this department was enabled to make all deliveries directly upon receipt of orders, even in the busiest season of the year.

We can assure our good friends in the trade that the year 1922 will see no diminution in our efforts to provide a highly satisfactory service to our customers.

We wish you a prosperous and profitable new year.

The Big Novel of Last Fall and This Spring

IF WINTER COMES

By

A. S. M. HUTCHINSON

Last August we predicted a sale of 100,000 copies by Christmas, and we sold 210,000. Now we dare predict a further sale of 100,000 copies before summer, and we really think it will be—well, perhaps enough to make the total sale larger than that of any novel published in the United States during the present century.

IF WINTER COMES will be heavily advertised during the next six months, and there seems to be no end to the free publicity which it is being given. Here is the latest:

"I have no doubt that the year 1921 will be known to the next generation as the year when Mark Sabre was born. . .

"Mark Sabre is going to be as real to me as long as I live as any man I have known in the flesh.

"For there are two sorts of inhabitants in this world; (1) Book People; (2) Flesh People.

"The second kind is a more or less developed animal; the first is a pure spiritual creation.

"For instance, these people just as really inhabit the earth as President Harding or Jack Dempsey; these people—Pantagruel, Don Quixote, Wilhelm Meister, Jean Valjean, Micawber, Little Lord Fauntleroy, Becky Sharp, and Uriah Heep.

"These are the true immortals that walk among us. And I have a strong suspicion that Mark Sabre belongs to the company. . .

"My hat is off to writer Hutchinson!"

"I hold every man a debtor to his profession, from the which, as men of course do seek to receive countenance and profit, so ought they of duty to endeavor themselves, by way of amends, to be a help and ornament thereunto."—BACON.

A Half Century Retrospect

WITH this issue the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY closes its fiftieth year. It was one of the pioneers in trade journalism and at its beginning only a few periodicals were devoted to the interest of specific industries. Of trade journals the number is now legion and each of hundreds of callings has its rival journalistic representatives.

There are at least fourteen hundred industrial journals in this country and Canada, exclusive of the agricultural press, and the number of persons engaged in their editorial, business and typographic service counts well toward, if not beyond, a hundred thousand. Such journals have the triple function of information, of interpretation and of leadership in their respective trades, and as the federal authorities recognized during the war, they are indeed "essential industries" which do their large share toward broadening and developing the industries which they serve.

It was to the professional devotion and foresight of Frederick Leypoldt that the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY owes its beginning at a time when the field of industrial journalism was almost uncultivated. He took up the work of a preceding journal, founded in 1852, which had failed to develop into full usefulness and the new periodical expanded as the industrial press developed. He nailed to the masthead the banner of Bacon's wise saying that "I hold every man a debtor to his profession"—and for himself, he paid that debt with abundant interest. This same thought was the inspiration of the faithful, loyal and devoted lieutenant, Adolph Growell, whose articles on "The Profession of Bookselling" became a textbook for the calling which he helped to dignify into a profession. It is indeed to be hoped that those who have to do with the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY in the future will never forget the indebtedness of the past to these two devoted leaders.

In this half century the book-trade has made creditable advance toward its larger and higher usefulness, alike in the individual work of the several publishing houses and in trade organization. After two associations had come and gone, the National Association of Book Publishers, it may be hoped, has come to stay, and no trade organization has started under better auspices nor with a larger sense of the need of trade co-operation. This is complemented by the National Publishers' Association, which includes the general periodical interest and the Associated Business Papers, Inc., in that specific field. In such matters as in dealing with the government, e. g., as to postal rates, these organizations are equipped to represent their several clienteles—a function whose need the federal government emphasized after it had directly caused the disbandment of the American Publishers' Association of pre-war days. No trade or profession is complete without these two essential elements of service, a representative press and a representative association.

That the book-trade has not yet reached or come within measurable distance of its maximum proportions cannot be too strongly emphasized. The book-trades of other countries, in their influence and sales, are proportionately in advance of our own, altho the possible field in this country is beyond comparison with that of other countries. In this half century the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY has done its best to emphasize this striking fact and to point the way to the development which is partly but not yet wholly achieved. As it reviews the past and the progress within the half century of its existence, it looks forward with greater hopefulness to the achievements of the future.

Paper Makers Ask Cut

REPRESENTATIVES of eleven large paper mills employing more than 12,000 workers have applied for arbitration on January 4th for a discussion of wage reduction in the paper mills averaging 25%. The arbitration board is being presided over by Judge Frank Irvine of Ithaca. Manufacturers in their presentation stated that paper prices could not be lowered unless the wage element in the cost was reduced. In claiming, however, that 30c an hour is an adequate wage in this field, it would seem that the Union could present a strong contention for a maintenance of the present 40c per hour scale. This on an 8-hour day is $3.20 a day. It would not seem that this was an amount that could be safely reduced with the welfare of the laborers kept in mind. The paper companies argued that the paper industry was operating only 75% of normal and if wages were cut that a 100% operation could be expected, so that the total payments would be equal to the present. It does not necessarily follow that this would be the case, as large users of paper could not and would not increase their consumption immediately. The manufacturers contend that 75% of the men in this industry are unskilled. The unions contend that not more than 15% are unskilled. If the truth of the matter comes somewhere between these points it would still seem that the men were getting no more than a fair wage at the $3.20 scale.

More Books in the Libraries

ONE of the chief subjects for discussion in all library circles during the past two years has been the problem of obtaining adequate public support to cover the increased needs of library work, and in many directions there have been well conceived efforts to put the needs and necessities of the library dramatically before the different communities. In Indiana this next April, there will be a Library Week, planned by the Association of Trustees in making a state wide effort to get better library support.

Publishers might be said to have merely a commercial interest in library success, but it is far more than that, as the publishers and book-trade better than most of the public can understand book figures and know how unfortunate the curtailment is for the general progress of book use.

The New York Times recently carried an interview with Director Anderson of the New York Public Library and Franklin F. Hopper, Chief of Circulation, pointing out how badly hit the library system of the metropolis has been by the budget curtailment in the book funds. Mr. Hopper's expression was that the city's retrenchment "had broken the back of the Library's book possessions, yet the public demand for books is constantly growing. In 1920, the collections began to dwindle, the year closing with more than 20,000 less books than at the beginning. In stinting its supply of books, the city is defaulting on payment of a vital civic insurance." Apart from the collections of the central building, which are provided from endowment, the large branch system receives for books and periodicals only $60,000 as compared with $127,500 in 1920. As this $60,000 includes both books and periodicals, the amount available is still further reduced. A city that probably purchases $4,000,000 or $5,000,000 worth of books in a year largely for use in the schools is certainly going beyond the needs of correct economy in cutting the book purchases for its library below $50,000 and allowing as the only supplement to this the money received from fines, about $70,000.

As the situation here is typical of that which is being discussed thruout the country, all groups who believe in the growth of the library are interested to see that next year progress is made toward fuller library support.

Spring Business Conditions

IN addressing a gathering of business men in Washington recently, Governor W. P. G. Harding, Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, predicted a real business boom in the spring. Governor Harding claimed that the Federal Reserve system had done much to stabilize conditions and that things thruout the country were very much better than they were a year ago.

The country, he said, had passed thru the crucial stages, and, while the reaction toward better conditions is by no means uniform, it is well marked. "I look forward," he said, "to advance in economic lines. The trade will pick up. We will reach a steady level probably in the spring. The present generation of business men has gathered a great stock of experience, which, of course, is not negotiable but because of this experience when we do hit our stride, we are going to have a period of unprecedented prosperity, a more sound, more sane and more substantial prosperity than we have ever had before."

Dodd Mead Takes Over Lane Business

The American Interests of English House Transferred

ON January 1st, Dodd, Mead & Company are taking over the entire American market for the famous imprint of John Lane, Ltd. This is to include not only all stock on hand and existing copyrights but a working relation with the English house, so that on all future publications they will have first consideration. Mr. Lane has been in this country for some months, having some new arrangement in mind for his American interests, and the conclusion of this contract with Dodd, Mead & Company marks the biggest move of an important publishing list that the book-trade has seen in many years. J. Jefferson Jones, who has conducted the American branch for John Lane for many years and made many contracts with American authors, is to be with Dodd, Mead & Company.

The connection with Dodd, Mead & Company has seemed to Mr. Lane to be very appropriate and advantageous, as the Lane list fits in very appropriately with the class of publishing that Dodd, Mead & Company have always stood for. A house that has handled so successfully Maeterlinck and Marshall will find itself at home in putting on the American market Anatole France or W. J. Locke.

Lane publications have always had an individuality and high standard that have made the imprint of first importance in both countries. The Lane successes have been many, while all thru the list there are titles that have their strong adherents even tho the books have not risen to wide sale. Probably the rights to the W. J. Locke copyrights and new books would be considered the most important part of the transaction. The permanency of Locke's popularity in America has been continually attested and it is one of the observed facts in sales totals that, of all the English novelists, Locke's outlet in this country varies less than any other. Some titles such as "The Rough Road," "The Beloved Vagabond" have risen to unusual quantities, but generally speaking a Locke novel means a first edition of 50,000 with subsequent reprints of from 5,000 to 25,000. Unusual interest, too, attaches to the edition of Anatole France and especially is this true now that the Nobel prize has just been most appropriately awarded to M. France. This is the only complete edition, a nobly planned and finely executed piece of publishing, and the market seems to be waiting for a popularization of his works. Dodd, Mead's experience with Maeterlinck should give them the right experience in handling this.

In the field of modern poetry, the Lane imprint has as important a list as any publishing imprint of either England or America. One has but to think over the list to see the remarkable character of what Mr. Lane has done. Francis Thompson, Ernest Dowson, Rupert Brooke, Arthur Symons, William Watson, Stephen Phillips, Lawrence Hope, A. E. Housman, G. K. Chesterton, Richard Le Gallienne, Arthur C. Benson, Lascelles Abercrombie, Thomas Walsh. The long list of G. K. Chesterton's books will supplement the important titles that are already on the Dodd, Mead list.

Stephen Leacock, the Canadian humorist, has probably had the widest sale in this country of any of the Lane books excepting only Locke, and such titles as "Nonsense Novels," "Sunshine Sketches" are constantly on the re-order list in the book-trade with no diminution of interest. In the field of art books, the Lane imprint has been notably strong, with such names as Audrey Beardsley, T. R. Way, famous Spanish series, Plowman's book on "Etching," the famous International Studio Supplements, W. Shaw Sparrow's book on Brangwyn, George Leland Hunter's "Tapestries" and "Home Furnishings," Calvert's "Moorish Remains."

Lane has also been interested in music as well as art, as is shown by the "Living Masters of Music Series" and the writings of Lawrence Gilman and Henry T. Finck. In the field of English memoirs, many famous titles have appeared, such as "Lady Cardigan," which was the "Margot Asquith" of its day. Among the American names that first come to mind are Theodore Dreiser, four of whose books have the Lane imprint, altho "The Genius" has been withdrawn from publication; Henry Harland's "Cardinal's Snuff Box" was one of the early successes of Lane; Coningsby Dawson supplied the Lane imprint with one of the most successful of war books; Julian Street's "Need of Change" ran promptly into the tens of thousands.

In the field of children's literature the important Walter Crane series comes first to mind because it is on every recommended list for children. There are also Kenneth Grahame's "Golden Age" and "Dream Days," Billinghurst's "Aesop" and "Hundred Anecdotes of Animals" and "Hundred Fables of La Fontaine," together with Cole's fine "Gulliver."

An author whose place is yearly more firmly recognized is Max Beerbohm, whose "Zuleika Dobson" and three other works have been on the Lane list. A. Neil Lyons is an English humorist that some day will get fuller recognition in this side. Vernon Lee is an English writer of real importance; and several of the best Eden Philpotts novels were on the list as well as Suderman's "Regina."

The list also carries the agency of the Vale Press and the Eragny Press, two of the most famous of the private presses of the present day and such well-known series as "The Pocket Library," "The Crown Library," "Flowers of Parnassus" and "Handbooks of Practical Gardening."

A Greater and Better Children's Book Week

A Nation-Wide Report

THE after view of Children's Book Week at headquarters of the Committee in New York would seem to indicate that booksellers and librarians all-over the United States and Canada, and in England too, will feel the effect for many a week to come in advising parents and clubs and boys and girls about books to buy. So great has been the activity that it is difficult to give any summary of the Week without slighting some fine effort.

A mass of newspaper clippings show a variety of activities in connection with the Week—activities that must have touched all classes of people in the community. Full page, half page and smaller advertisements of dealers; editorials; book lists; reproductions of the Jessie Willcox Smith poster and the Thomas Bailey Aldrich bookcase drawing; special book review columns and pages devoted to children's books; special articles about children's books; and literally hundreds of news columns. Never before has a book campaign so caught fire and spread thru the whole country, breaking out in remotest rural districts as well as in the large cities.

The Committee sent out 10,000 Jessie Willcox Smith posters, 6,000 streamers, 150,000 copies of the Jessie Willcox Smith miniature card, 60,000 of the Thomas Aldrich Bailey bookcase flyers, 35,000 copies of the Booksellers' Guide, 3,000 copies of the Librarian's Guide, 2,000 copies each of the circular for schools, circular for boy scouts, program for clubs, list of films recommended by The National Board of Review. Many letters from school superintendents and teachers who had not observed Children's Book Week before were given careful attention with suggestions about getting in touch with local book distribution agencies.

The general discussion of children's books promoted from the office has been supplemented by specific suggestions planned in many quarters: 100,000 copies of the "Bookshelf for Boys and Girls," edited by Clara W. Hunt, Ruth S. Hopkins, and Franklin Mathews and published by the R. R. Bowker Co. were used. The American Library Association printed a list of "Children's Books for Christmas Presents," edited by Sarah C. N. Bogle—100 titles, briefly annotated. The Children's Book Shop of New York City, of which Marian Cutter is manager, issued a beautifully printed and illustrated list, which includes valuable additions to the excellent lists of juvenile books, namely, Part III, Books for Boys and Girls, suggestive for Books on Reading and Story-telling for Parents and Teachers, to which are added "a few books of fiction dealing with boy and girl life." The Atlantic Monthly in its November Bookshelf had a specially prepared "Boys' and Girls' Bookshelf," with acknowledgment for help in editing, to the Boys' and Girls' Bookstore, to Lauriat's, to the Old Corner Bookstore, and to Miss

Jordan of the Boston Public Library. John Martin's "Blue Book of Best Reading for Children" was published during the Week, and includes not only John Martin's Best Book List of 130 titles fully annotated and suggestions about the ages of children for which the books are suitable, but also a larger supplementary list classified by subject and by age. "The Giant of Worthless Reading" was also reprinted by John Martin for the Week, and is being widely distributed. The Los Angeles Public Library list of twenty-five "Books for Children," was printed in an edition of 25,000 copies; the cover bears a reproduction in black and white of the Jessie Willcox Smith poster, and this interesting inscription "A shopping list compiled by the public library and printed by the publishers to recommend books which may be found in the stores of Los Angeles." The Boston Bookshop for Boys and Girls printed a list of "New Books for Boys and Girls, suggestive for Christmas or other buying," attractively illustrated with silhouettes from "Breezes" by Lucy Gibbons Morse. "Fifty Books for Christmas Gifts for Children" was the Savannah Public Library List and the Detroit Public Library "Library Service" had a special list. The Indianapolis Public Library printed a new edition of Charles Rush's "Two Good Books a Year for My Child," and distributed 5,000 copies thru the library. 3,000 additional copies were bought by two local bookstores and distributed in connection with special sales tables of the books. The library also issued a new edition of "Some New Books for Boys and Girls," which was printed and distributed by the W. K. Stewart Book Store. The University of Texas Department of Library Science distributed a classified and graded list in connection with its exhibit of books.

Many of the publishers issued special catalogs and circulars for the Week, notably, Macmillan, Volland, Rand McNally, Charles Scribner's Sons, with a pamphlet on Robert Louis Stevenson; Milton Bradley. Stewart Kidd and Barse & Hopkins, special lists printed on the Jessie Willcox Smith miniature cards; special pages in Newsabout, published by the United Religious Book Association; broadsides and letters to the trade from Funk & Wagnalls, Grosset and Dunlap and others, special lists and comment in Baker & Taylor's Latest Books and Bulletin, and in the Bowker Company's Books of the Month.

Among the bookstores which made special use of the Jessie Willcox Smith card were Abraham & Straus of Brooklyn, which distributed the cards with their special Children's Book Week program printed on the back, and Himebaugh & Browne of New York City, who used 15,000 of the cards, mailing many of them as printed invitations to the store.

Two of the full page newspaper ads which attracted most attention were those of the Denver Dry Goods Company, in the Denver Post November 13th, which also had a special write-up in "Suzanne's Column" of the Post, and Herr & Herr Company of South Bend, Ind., which used a full page of cuts and text for its advertisement, mentioning no special books. The suggestion of a "Buy a Book Club" was made to the children and at the foot of the ad appeared this sentence:

"Here you will find books that will inspire to Heroism, Loyalty, Truthfulness, Thrift, Chivalry, Integrity, Generosity, Patience, Perseverance as well as Tenderness, Kindness, Gentleness and all the worth-while traits so desirable in Boys and Girls."

The advertisement of the Missouri Stores in Columbia gave a list of 16 books with an offer of prizes of $2.00 books for the best reviews of books on the list, the prizes to be selected by the winners.

At Marshall Field's in Chicago, special programs were held. Eva Cloud Taylor, special lecturer for the University of Illinois Library School, talked to mothers on "Good Fiction for Boys and Girls." Adah F. Whitcomb, head of the children's department, Chicago Public Library, talked on reading for older children, and Olive Roberts Barton, author of Nancy & Nick Series was present with children from her books, in costume, and told stories to an interested audience.

Among the Bookshops

In San Francisco, the campaign was in charge of Caroline Allen, representative of The Book House for Children Co. As a result of her splendid organization work among the stores, schools, clubs and churches, widespread interest was aroused, Miss Allen was made a member of the local Booksellers' Association, and plans were laid for starting next July the organization of the 1922 Children's Week.

Six hundred people were present at the big wind-up of the Book Review contest of the J. K. Gill Co., of Portland, Oregon. This entertainment was the occasion of the awarding of prizes, and was held in the Portland Public Library. Over three hundred reviews were sent in, in the contest which was widely announced thru the papers, in the windows, and in a folder distributed thru the Public Library, the Boy Scouts, the Campfire Girls, the Business Women's Club, all departments of the store and mailed to all the children on the "Birthday List." Three windows in the store held unusual displays: One, "Santa Claus Prepares for Christmas;" another, "The Boys' and Girls' Home Library," with real children reading and listening to stories in the window every afternoon, attracting a crowd of spectators; and another, the "Hey Diddle Diddle" window, featuring Mother Goose books, with clever cut-out figures of the Cow, the Moon, the Cat and the Fiddle, the Little Dog and the Egg and the Spoon and a starry sky as a background for the whole.

Macauley's Book Store, Sheehan's, Dennen's and the book department of the J. L. Hudson Co. co-operated in planning Children's Book Week for Detroit, arranging press notices, speaking engagements before local clubs, letters to all the churches and special window displays. Mr. Koethen of the J. L. Hudson Co. wrote a scenario for a two-minute reel produced by the Free Press Films for local movie theaters.

Moving picture theaters thruout the country co-operated with bookstores and libraries in arranging exhibitions of films based on books for children, using the list of recommendations sent out by the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures.

Appeals for help and advice and posters are still reaching the Committee, and they believe that the influence of the Week will be felt thruout the year, leading to even a greater Children's Book Week in 1922.

Contests and Prizes

At Columbia, Mo., the bookstores carried a co-operative advertisement, offering prizes of sixteen two dollar books for reviews of books from a designated list. The best review of each book was displayed in the stores and the name of the winner published in the newspaper. The advertisement called attention to the display at the stores and at the public library. At McClurg's, Chicago, Clara Ingram Judson gave talks on "What Is Your Child Reading?" to mothers and children, and all children visiting the department were given a copy of "The Teenie Weenie's Visit to McClurg's Bookland," a 24-page illustrated booklet. At Utica, John L. Grant offered ten prizes to the boys and girls of the vicinity for the best essay about his bookstore and the books liked best. The first prize was a Thomas Bailey Aldrich bookcase and five dollars worth of books. The second prize was a bookcase and a pen.

Goldsmith's Store of Wichita, Kans., turned over its entire book department to the children during Children's Book Week, and its advertisement announced that every little girl who visited the store was to be given free a cut out book of dolls. At Libbey, Montana, where there was no bookstore, a local drug-store put in a supply of good books and had a fine window display at the instigation of the library. Wanamaker's, New York, had one of the most remarkable efforts, as Saturday previous was Children's Day, conducted as part of their so-called "Bookman's Week." A notable group of addresses was given to young and old in the big auditorium. Another feature in this store has been the beautiful tableau of "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," arranged by the toy department but a great stimulus to the books as well and most elaborately and beautifully carried out. Abraham & Straus, Brooklyn, had a special Children's Book Week program every day and asked the co-operation of the librarian in connection with their displays. At Denver, Colorado, the Denver Dry Goods Company carried a full page advertisement in the Denver Post, and Kendrick Bellamy, Lewis Dry Goods Company and Daniels & Fisher all had large display advertisements and special features.

Art Exhibits

The Metropolitan Museum, New York, had an exhibit of drawings, wood-cuts and sketches by Florence Wyman Ivins and an exhibit of beautifully illustrated books. The Brown Robertson Galleries of New York had an exhibit of pastels by Hugh Lofting, the author and illustrator of "Dr. Doolittle." The Cleveland Museum of Art also held an exhibition of beautifully illustrated books. It is hoped that another year a still wider use of this idea of exhibits in part museums in connection with the Week can be developed.

Children's Book Week in the Libraries

The general magazines such as Collier's Weekly, The Weekly Review, The Independent, The Literary Digest, The Dial, Outlook, Good Housekeeping, Delineator, Survey and others, and the religious periodicals such as The Christian Register, The Christian Advocate, The Baptist, and The Lutheran Church Herald have had special articles and issues. Most of them have carried special lists of children's books and book reviews.

Many library bulletins that are coming to hand show that these house organs were used very extensively in promoting Children's Book Week, and in most cases the Week was the leading feature in one issue. The New Hampshire Commission issued a fine statement in September. The fine exhibit of the Milwaukee Public Library was well written up in the City Club News. The Haverhill Public Library bulletin was typical of what was arranged in many of the smaller cities. In New York exceptionally good publicity was a feature of the Board of Education bulletin in November.

As in past years, the opening day of Children's Book Week was made the occasion of a special gathering at the Children's Room in the Forty-Second Street building of the New York Library. This annual occasion is intended not so much for children and parents as for librarians of the branch libraries and for the many friends of the library connected with the literary and journalistic work of the city. Annie Carroll Moore, Supervisor of Children's Work in the New York Public Library, had for speakers Nora Archibald Smith, co-editor with her sister, Kate Douglas Wiggin in editing the new edition of "Scottish Chiefs." A special international aspect was then given to the occasion by speakers from France and Italy, who told about the Children's Book Week of those countries. Miss Tyler, author of "Twenty-Four Unusual Stories," published this year, and Chief of Story Hour Direction in the New York Library, gave a reading.

As in previous years, the public libraries have been the most effective groups in presenting the cause of children's reading to the public, and the character of the celebrations this year has indicated that in more and more libraries they have welcomed this opportunity to meet the community in the interest of the children's home reading. In the great mass of clippings that have been sent in since the Week was over, the activities of the libraries have furnished a great part of the material, and newspapers have realized that whatever the library does is of very concrete interest to all their readers.

This interest has not been confined to the United States, and in Canada also the libraries have been taking a front place in developing the Week's events. In the Toronto libraries the idea of a special week of emphasis on children's books in the fall has been an institution of many years' standing. Many of the libraries have responded to the request of the Committee for reports of their efforts, and these have been carefully read and filed with special reference to next year's suggestions. It is interesting to note that in many of the reports an increased attendance at the library has been shown and an increased registration in their circulation department.

Many Lists of Children's Books

In New Orleans, according to the Picayune, Henry M. Gill, the Librarian, states that there has been a thirty per cent increase in juvenile circulation, and more than twelve hundred children who visited the library during Book Week exhibit had never entered the library before, and fifteen per cent of those that came took out library cards.

Most of the libraries have taken initiative in putting out booklists of some kind to make concrete the suggestions that were embodied in the lectures and exhibits. More than half of the 100,000 edition of The Bookshelf for Boys and Girls as distributed by the libraries. A list entitled "Books for Children" was distributed to a total of 25,000 copies by Los Angeles. The American Library Association circulated a list of "100 Children's Books for Christmas Presents." Indianapolis made a new edition of Charles E. Rush's list "Two Good Books A Year For My Children." From the Oklahoma Library Commission comes the report of 10,000 copies of a list sent out to schools and libraries, and the Savannah, Ga., library made an attractive list entitled "50 Books for Christmas Gifts to the Children." There were many other similar catalogs sent in.

The idea of the Thomas Bailey Aldrich bookcase was taken up by the libraries with great enthusiasm, and in almost all the reports there is indication that this bookcase idea has been widely disseminated. In a good many towns an exhibit of bookcases was shown in the library with prize contests arranged in some instances. The manual training classes of the public schools were enthusiastic about this feature.

The character of the clippings on the Week shows that the libraries have been largely perfecting their ability to approach the newspapers with interesting material, and the character of the articles before and after Children's Book Week showed that they obtained fine publicity for the work. The material included special articles, illustrations, editorials, special booklists prepared for the newspapers, book pages, book reviews, etc. The libraries cooperated with the moving picture industry in its exhibits, with art museums, and with school and club in the preparation of programs.

Posters and Placards

The fact that Children's Book Week opened on Robert Louis Stevenson's birthday was featured in much of the publicity in the newspaper write-ups as well as in the moving pictures.

At the Indianapolis Library, a movie of "Alice in Wonderland" was run at the central building, and the library prepared placards for its various bulletin boards and carried full display material at the central Library. This Library also furnished practically complete the material used in the special book number of The American Friend.

A new idea of very fundamental value was developed at the Milwaukee Public Library, where the lobby was used in featuring a carefully prepared display of the books which other countries have contributed to the literature which our children enjoy. This exhibit gave testimony to the indebtedness that we cheerfully acknowledge to the other countries not only for stories and legends but for pictures as well. Such an exhibit also makes a very obvious appeal to the groups in the city whose home literature is thus represented.

In the Jacksonville Library, book posters were made in the schools for the Florida State Fair and used during Children's Book Week there and later in the Public Library. It also arranged a special moving picture suitable to the Week. At Birmingham, there was a unique exhibit of old books for children, thirty-six different editions of "Mother Goose" being shown and one book thirty-nine hundred years old. Mr. Josselyn, the Librarian, gave a talk to a dozen gatherings, and an entire page in the Age Herald featured his talk on this subject with photographs and booklists. Waterloo, Iowa, placed its exhibit in the main reading rooms with the idea of getting the attention of the adults and interesting them in their children's reading. The books were arranged on bookcases that had been built along the Thomas Bailey Aldrich plan by the manual training classes of the city.

At Rochester, twelve prizes were offered for the best bookcases made from plans furnished by the branch libraries, and all children's rooms were kept open every night for the display in the local press of books. The Dayton, Ohio, Library obtained nearly a page display for its articles and news about Children's Book Week. Miss Elizabeth West, State Librarian of Texas, was a strong advocate of children's book discussion in her state, and among other efforts gave an address on the subject before the Council of Mothers at San Antonio.

Denver arranged attractive exhibits both in main libraries and branches, and at the opening of each exhibit librarians gave lectures on Stevenson, Lucy Fitch Perkins and Hans Christian Andersen. Belleville, Illinois, Library offered a prize of five dollars for the best bookcase, and a second prize of a subscription to Boys' Life. At Evanston, Illinois, an exhibit of "Dolls of All Nations" was an added feature in bringing people to the book exhibit. The Humboldt County Library in California offered prizes for the best essays on "Books That I Like to Read," and local booksellers offered second prizes. At the Dallas Library, "fairy questions" were given to children visiting the Library, such questions as "Who had a magic lamp?" "Who won a pair of silver skates?" Children were told that books and librarians would help them find answers.

At the Cincinnati Library, a very novel plan was developed to catch the children's interest. The titles of sixty-five children's books were concealed in a little story circulated from the library. The winner of the prize was able to name sixty of these. Cincinnati had one of the best rounded programs with bookcase exhibits, book reviews written by children, many addresses to Mothers' Clubs, a window exhibit in a nearby store, co-operation with the schools in trying to get each child to read a book that week. One county school was able to establish a long needed manual training department thru the interest created by the Aldrich bookcase.

From the widespread reports, it is difficult not to keep quoting, but all the material is of great value in planning for another year, and the friendly letters from the librarians show that they have found in this annual occasion one of the opportunities that they know how to turn to the greatest possible advantage for the children of their communities.

Children's Book Week in the Schools

This year has seen the third annual Children's Book Week.

Hundreds of schools in co-operation with local public libraries, clubs and bookstores, have held special book talks for Children's Book Week, book exhibits, contests in book reviewing, bookcase making, poster and bookplate designing, book plays and moving pictures and special book programs. Teachers' and parent-teachers' meetings have devoted special discussions to children's reading. Clippings received from all over the country indicate a tremendously increased interest.

In connection with Children's Book Week, school superintendents and educational journals thruout the United States and Canada, have stressed the importance of outside reading and the message has reached even far removed rural districts from which come letters like this:

"Our school has no library, not even a bookcase. The pupils are all bright, and good reading appeals to them, but as the district is quite poor and as they live some distance from town, not even being served by a mail route, they have few chances of reading good books.

Or,

"We have decided to build a bookcase and would like you to send us specifications for one that the boys may make.

Or,

"We intend to get books by holding socials of different kinds and using the funds for that purpose, or by donations. Could you suggest any ways by which to increase our library?"

And this:

"I am a young teacher, this being my third year of teaching and I feel that there is a great need of books for my pupils. They do not like to read anything but primary books altho they are in advanced grades. What can I do? Their parents seem to think that the children should not read anything but text books. Can you help me?"

In sharp contrast to such appeals are letters like the following, which indicate how the desire to read and own books can spread if started right:

"I happen to be the principal of a school in a well-to-do neighborhood where book buying is still in style. We have but to mention a book, and the next day a dozen or more copies will appear in that particular room. Therefore anything you may send will be appreciated."

Another:

"A taste for good books is being formed as the result of the reading of prose literature for appreciation in our new course of study in English. All during the fall we have been urging our pupils to spend the long evenings reading good stories from the public libraries. On the first day of Book Week I again presented the subject and asked how many had a book borrowed from the library, how many read one story book a week and two stories a week. I asked how many owned a good book and I was not surprised to find that very few did. Then I told them of the joy to be got from the possession of good books and I spoke enthusiastically of my own library. I urged them to save their money and buy the first book for their own libraries. The English teacher in the departmental classes hung the poster in her room and did splendid "follow up" work with his classes as did also the Sixth Grade teachers. The teachers gave good advice as to the selection of the books and urged their pupils to bring the books they purchased to school so that all might see them. They not only brought in their books, but they told where they had purchased them and how much they had paid for them.

"We have kept the subject so alive that at least eighty-five per cent of our sixth, seventh and eighth grade pupils are now collecting a library. The individual libraries number anywhere from one to seven books."

Many teachers have used Children's Book Week in their efforts to arouse interest in starting a community library. One writes:

"We want to use the Children's Book Week posters in connection with a 'bake' by which we hope to raise funds for a library for our intermediate grades."

Another:

"We plan to increase our library lists by asking patrons and other people of the community to give us the price of a book. It is our idea that we shall campaign for more and better books in the home as well as in the schools."

The schools at the best, have a child for only ten or fifteen years of his life. A great educator once said "A man is worth to others his power to impart; he is worth to himself his capacity to enjoy." At the end of school years, a boy or girl may have gained much useful information, but if he has not gained the capacity to enjoy books, he is not apt to turn to them for either information or pleasure. William Frederick Bigelow says in Good Housekeeping for November, 1921: "What you want your child to do you must do first or show him that someone else, whom you admire, has done it. Now is the way made easy for you; the shelves of all the libraries of the world conspire with you to inspire him, to delight him, to make a man of him. . . . Books are as essential to the real life of the child—or the parent—as meat and drink. Have you a table spread for him, where he may be trained up in that from which he will not depart when he is old—the habit of reading good books?"

Posters and circulars of suggestions about observing the Week are sent each year to schools applying to the Children's Book Week Committee. The demand for the Jessie Willcox Smith poster, however, far exceeded the supply, but provision will be made for a larger supply next year.

It is not too early to begin planning special programs on children's literature for 1922 summer schools and educational meetings, holding up the standards of Children's Book Week thruout the year.

Promoting Children's Work

A VERY effective form of promotion connected with Children's Book Week was the large eight-sheet bulletins prepared by the American Library Association and sold at moderate cost to different libraries for display in their corridors or at gatherings where the idea of better home reading for children was discussed. This series of posters was of gray board with text in large caslon type. The photographs, which made the posters so personal and interesting, were large original negatives taken from specially posed illustrations. Three of these photographs illustrating different points are reproduced on this and the preceding page.

Elaborate Children's Book Campaign

WHEN John Martin with his magazine moved into the new quarters on Forty-eighth Street (fifth tree from Fifth Avenue) he took over a building giving complete equipment for book and periodical promotion, and the energy with which this larger work is to be undertaken is indicated by material now coming out with the John Martin imprint.

One feature of this effort is of as much value in general book promotion as it is to the John Martin store. This is the reprinting in quantities for free distribution of an article in the September John Martin's Book entitled "The Giant of Worthless Reading." This little article told how two children who had a finely assorted shelf of good books allowed the Giant of Worthless Reading, who appeared to them to tumble this group of books off their shelf and to put in their places a lot of fair-to-middling stuff that no child would ever want to read a second time. The idea being presented in this story form gets the point of good book selection home to the children themselves, and a wide distribution of an article like Mr. Mumford's article, distributed by Penn Pub. Co., will undoubtedly help the whole cause of better home libraries.

At the same time, as a practical business builder, the John Martin house is issuing a most beautiful children's catalog, decorated in their well-known style, and with much sound advice on children's books. The major list consists of about 130 titles with full descriptions, and this is followed by supplementary classified groups, in which sections there will be changes from time to time. A very large edition of this catalog is being sent out in free distribution, and the large amount of helpful talk about books as well as the listing of the books themselves should make this catalog of more than ordinary value.

Atlantic's Children's Booklist

A CLASSIFIED list of books for children covering 100 or more titles was made a feature of the Atlantic's "Bookshelf," this being the reprint that the Atlantic makes of its front advertising section and distributes with some little extra text to the book and library trade. This list was prepared by Frances Lester Warner of the Atlantic staff with the co-operation of the Boys' and Girls' Bookshop, Charles E. Lauriat Company, the Old Corner Bookstore and Miss Jordan of the Boston Public Library. The list was a very happy one and well arranged, and supplied just one more good help to the cause of more children's bookselling during Children's Book Week and after.

Cronies

By Louise Ayres Garnett, author of "The Muffin Shop," and others.

Come! Guess my name—I know you can.
I'm made both for, and made by man.
I might be called the Tree of Worth
With roots in every soil on earth;
My leaves, apparent to the blind,
Are not deciduous in kind;
I'm modest: tho I've much to say,
Just shut me up and I obey;
I'm nautical, for I adore
To know I have a sale in store;
Of all the colors that there are
It's read I'd rather be, by far;
Tho often cut I'm seldom snubbed,
Tho often soiled I'm seldom tubbed;
In rank I am a noble Chief
For I am titled past belief:
In fact, in me you're sure to find
The type of your especial kind.
You've guessed! I hear you cry, "Gadzooks!
Why, that's my good old crony, Books."

Book Certificates

THE use of certificates instead of merchandise at Christmas giving time has been gaining ground and proved to be especially feasible in the case of books, as friendly givers liked to indicate that it was in the book field that they would choose to be donors, and yet felt hesitancy to select the exact items. The Old Corner Bookstore advertised to send a book a week as a gift, and Dutton's retail department took an order in that form. Putnam's advertisement in the New York paper read: "When in doubt, buy a book certificate and let your friend make his own selection, five dollars to five thousand dollars." This range of figures certainly left the donor plenty of room in which to make his offer. It is important that such gifts should be in dignified and appropriate shape, and it has been suggested that the Year Round Bookselling Committee could plan to design the right type of certificate and make them more generally available over the country next fall.

Australian Prize Novel

A NEW publisher in Australia, C. J. Degaris of Melbourne, initiated his enterprise this year by advertising thruout the Commonwealth that he would offer a prize of five hundred pounds for the best Australian novel. The reports say that he found plenty of material to pick from, and the first prize was awarded to Frank Russell for his novel of Melbourne life of today, entitled "The Ashes of Achievement." Russell was a lawyer who, after living in Melbourne a few years, came to this country, contributing to our magazines, and then spent two years in London before returning to Australia. The publisher reports that already English and American editions have been arranged.

The Goncourt Prize

THE greatest literary prize of the year, the Prix Goncourt of $1,200 for the best novel written in 1921, has been awarded to a negro, René Maron, author of "Baboula," is the winner in the contest which hundreds entered. He and a Frenchman, Chardonne, tied for first place, but the Chairman of the Selection Committee decided in Maron's favor.

The writer is thirty-four, a native of Martinique and at present in the French Colonial Administration at Lake Chad, Africa. His book deals with the aspirations of the black race and is filled with bitter satire on Western civilization. Besides this novel, Maron has written two books of verse.

"Suggested" by the Novel

AFTER seeing the film production of her novel, "Star Dust," Fannie Hurst published a bitter attack on the producers, claiming that they had in no way produced her story as written. The producers replied that in their contract Miss Hurst gave the right to alter the story in any way and agreed that the film would be announced not as the work of Miss Hurst but as "suggested by" her novel. This use of "suggested by" would make it much easier for book readers to enjoy films based on their favorite books when they find them on the screen and might prevent them from wondering why there was so little relation between the plot of the film and the plot of the book. the plot of the film and the plot of the book or short story.

Fifty Princess Radziwills

THE author of "Behind the Veil in the Russian Court" and other books under the name of Count Paul Vassili, the former Princess Catharine Radziwill of Russia, has been brought before the magistrate in New York for jumping a hotel bill of $1,239. It seems from the newspapers that the Princess is one of probably fifty Princess Radziwills in Germany, Russia and Poland, and that she was sentenced to two years imprisonment in Cape Town in 1902 for forging Cecil Rhodes's name.

Mr. Herr Plays Host

EUGENE L. Herr, President of the American Booksellers' Association, had for a guest at Lancaster on Dec. 3, Sidney Williams, the well-known book critic of the Philadelphia North American. His visit was made the occasion of a lecture before the Women's Club, which made it a guest evening, and a large number of both men and women were present. This club has been giving the entire year to discussion of books, and Mr. Herr was thus able as a bookseller to enrich their program.

Seeks $100,000 for Recipe

MRS. IDA BAILEY ALLEN CHAPMAN, New York domestic science lecturer, has sued the Hebe Publishing Company in United States District Court for $100,000, claiming her professional reputation had been endangered by publication over her name of an incorrect recipe for making waffles. The suit asserts waffles made after the published recipe would be inferior to "anything she ever concocted."

War Veteran Wins Knopf Prize

A PARTIALLY blind war veteran is the first winner of the Knopf prize for the best book written by a Columbia undergraduate during the year, "Cobblestones." David Sentner is the author, blind in one eye and rapidly losing the sight of the other eye. Mr. Sentner, a member of the Columbia class of 1923, served two years in the Twenty-seventh Division, A. E. F., and was severely wounded while in action on the Hindenburg Line and again in Flanders. He went to Columbia under the United States Veterans' Bureau to study writing. At Columbia he has contributed to the university literary magazines.

A Bookseller's Prayer

AT the reception held by the Orientalia Bookshop at 22 East 60th Street in November to point to the expansion and extension of the work of this shop, a little souvenir was given to all who attended, a copy of "The National Proverbs of Arabia." A slip in the book called attention "in a strictly non-professional spirit to the third proverb on page 57," which read as follows: "God deliver us from the man of one book"—surely a bookseller's prayer.

A Christmas booklet that the Yale University Press sends out has a little introduction on the spirit of books at Christmas:

"No Christmas gift is more appreciated than a good book. It carries with it an expression of careful selection. It adds to the gift the compliment of personal choice. Sometimes we wonder why people select anything but books, especially when it is so easy to find just the right sort for each particular friend.

"To discover a good book for a friend is to give him a pleasure which he might not otherwise have."

Some Savings for 1922

ON January 1st, the war tax on express shipments is to be lifted with a saving to the public of $1,500,000 a month, according to the newly published statements of the President of the American Railway Express Company. The average express charge so far during 1921 has approximated $1.50 and the average war tax, 8c. Elimination of the tax, therefore, will virtually amount to a decrease of rates of a little over 5%. This is a well appreciated saving in the general cost of distributing merchandise over such a wide area.

This announcement makes a pleasant supplement to some of the figures that were given in connection with the elimination of the 8% tax on railroad fare. This repeal also goes into effect January 1st, and the saving will be very appreciable, especially in connection with the expense of putting travelers on the road. It is because of this latter importance that the Publishers' Association and many national organizations have been pressing for a change at this point. The elimination of this tax will mean a saving of anywhere from 50c to $2 a day by every traveler or field representative.

The Cost of Doing Business

THE stationers thru their national organization have been endeavoring to get more accurate figures as to the cost of doing business, and at their national convention the committee who had been studying the matter made a report. It seems apparent that stationers are as little inclined to answer questionnaires as booksellers when it comes to cost figures, and the reason is probably somewhat the same, that they are not wholly sure of their own figures. Out of 455 questionnaires mailed out to members handling office furniture, the committee received only 19 replies. The cost of doing business in this office furniture field, as indicated by returns, was 38.89%. The second questionnaire was then sent to the entire dealer membership of the Association, to which only 51 replies were received. These 51 replies give the following figures:

Gross profit	38.65%
Cost of doing business	28.96%
Net profits	9.68%
Turnover	2.84%
Freight charges	4.77%

Too much importance cannot be given to figures based on so small a percentage, as with few exceptions stores could easily make an error in the deductions. A figure very commonly used in the stationery trade is that of 30% as the cost of doing business, and an investigation in Chicago last year pointed toward expense slightly in excess of that. Bookstores do not have quite as high a gross profit, possibly 3% lower, but at the same time their turnover is usually better. Whatever figures are collected by various industries, there is at least one place in which they all point to the same conclusion, and that is that there is great need of better figures from which to work.

Some Scale Reductions

THE wage scale of the Press Feeders and Assistants in New York has been reduced by arbitration by $1.00 per week, from $37.50 to $36.50.

Job Pressmen are reduced from $38.50 to $36.00; job press feeders from $28.00 to $26.00. The Paper Handlers are now reduced from $33.00 to $31.00. The decisions in these two latter groups have been reached by negotiations between the Employing Printers and only the first by arbitration.

Rapid Industrial Growth

THE toy trade of America estimates that its product of toys and games for the last census year was $46,000,000 at wholesale as compared to $14,000,000 in the previous census year of 1914. As the importation of toys, even in the pre-war period was only $8,000,000, it will be seen that this enormous gain in production has not been merely as a substitute for a supply cut off by a creation of an entirely new business. Such an increase has been undoubtedly made possible by the co-operative promotion of this group, and the association of toy manufacturers has done energetic work in increasing the public interest and the general consumption of toys. Their effort is along the same lines as that of the publishers.

German Exports to United States

THE question of the effect of importations from Germany into the United States has been much to the front during these past few months when the new tariff bill has been under discussion. Fresh figures from Germany show that the exports of books and pictures from Germany to the United States in June was 32,788,000 marks; in July, 35,008,000 marks. This, with marks at their present rate, is something under $200,000 is largely in the field of lithography, picture cards, pictures, etc.

Hebrew Prayer Book Revised

AFTER five years of incessant labor by distinguished rabbis, the second volume of a revised Hebrew Union Book of Prayer is completed. It will be published before the holy days in the Jewish calendar next fall. More than 300 liberal congregations will use it. The revised Book of Prayer contains the ritual and prayers for the Jewish New Year and Day of Atonement. Volume I. was completed two years ago, being a revision of the ritual for Sabbaths and week days. It is the first revision in thirty years. The volumes have been adopted collectively by the Central Conference of American Rabbis, representing the liberal congregations of the United States. The work is based on a prayer book said to be nearly 2,000 years old, with additions to fit modern needs. Many of the old prayers are retained and printed in Hebrew, but the greater part of both volumes is in English.

Ads in the Library Bulletin

COSTELLO'S Bookstore in Lynn, Mass., takes advantage of the advertising space provided in the quarterly bulletin of the Lynn Public Library to carry a card prominently displayed, announcing that any book in the catalog can be bought new at Costello's Bookstore, 333 Union Street. This seems a most admirable place for an advertisement, as the quarterly bulletin contains a list of all the books that have been added to the Library in the previous three months. The bulletin is more than half given over to advertising space, which presumably makes it not only self-supporting but profitable, and in this way an advertisement of the bookstore while especially advantageous is not a special concession.

Coming in January

"THE LITERARY YEAR BOOK" for 1922, edited and published by Mark Meredith of Liverpool, is promised for publication early in January. The PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY will be the American agent by arrangement with the publisher. The new volume will contain upward of one thousand pages or four hundred more than the annual for 1921, and, while much of the contents is of special interest to Englishmen, there is to be a wealth of reference material of direct interest to Americans.

"The Literary Year Book" is an international Vade Mecum especially designed for authors, editors and bookmen; a work in which is gathered an extremely useful array of important facts, information, data and suggestions not obtainable in any other work of reference.

Russian Book Market

THE most recent report on conditions in the book market of Russia is one contained in an article printed in the Publishers' Circular, London, where a letter from the British Commercial Mission to Russia is printed:

British Commercial Mission, Moscow,
November 3rd.

GENTLEMEN,—I have to acknowledge, with thanks, receipt of your letter of October 8th, and of copies of your catalogs. The position as regards the book market in Russia may be described as follows:—

1. All printing works were originally nationalized, but some of these have recently, in accordance with the new economic policy of the Soviet Government, been leased to private persons and co-operative organizations.

2. No newspapers except those published by official Soviet institutions are at present allowed to be published.

3. Attempts are being made in various quarters to secure permission to issue non-political periodicals. So far as the Mission is aware, however, the only private periodical issued is the Ekran, devoted exclusively to the theater.

4. As regards foreign papers and books the Bolshevik Government has hitherto prohibited their import, except for the use of Soviet institutions. Here, again, however, there are active attempts to obtain permission to import non-political literature, and there is reason to believe that these attempts may be successful.

I am, Gentlemen,

Your obedient Servant,
R. M. HOOPER,
British Agent.

Bookbinding and the War

"THE bookbinding trade is no exception to others in that the disastrous economic effects of the war have been felt with special severity by those sections concerned with the more elaborate and costly work—i.e., the ornamental or luxurious, as distinct from the necessary or utilitarian," says the British and Colonial Printer and Stationer. "We gather that the few firms specializing in expensive bindings have lately been experiencing a most formidable period of diminished demand for this class of work. The slump is all the more trying because of the long-continued and steady growth of the demand up to the time when the war miasma brought partial paralysis in its train. The development of this branch of binding had been proceeding satisfactorily for some twenty years or so before it was arrested, and it had by that time reached very considerable proportions, a gratifying feature of the situation being the value of our exports to America, whose bibliophiles were purchasing British bindings of which single examples sometimes sold at prices running well into four figures."

Libraries as Booksellers

THE State Library Commission of Wisconsin, which has always assumed a very real responsibility for putting the book to its fullest use in that state, recently sent out a form letter to the editor of every small newspaper, suggesting that if that editor wanted to have the best paper in the state he would want to be familiar with some of the dozen books that were mentioned on the list enclosed. Many editors sent to the State Library for the books, but some wrote, expressing thanks for the list and saying "We ought to have these books, and are going to buy them."

Another incident showing book sales promotion comes from the children's librarian in Clinton, Iowa, who received the new book on Jewish fairy tales and sent it out to two or three Jewish parents, asking them to pass judgment. They were so pleased that they reported favorably on the book for the library and said that they would proceed to buy it themselves.

An Outline of Science

A BOOK that has been the natural sequel, perhaps, to Wells's "The Outline of History," has been announced by Newnes of England and the American rights will be controlled by G. P. Putnam's Sons. This is "The Outline of Science," edited by Professor J. Arthur Thompson. It is now being published in England in parts in the same general format as was the Wells "Outline" when issued in England by Newnes. Putnam's plan is to issue it on this side in four volumes, but, instead of waiting till the fall to issue the set, they will issue the first volume containing five of the twenty parts on the spring list, the other volumes to follow at intervals. There will be in the set eight hundred black and white illustrations and forty plates in color.

In the Field of the Retailer

A Garden for Booklovers

THE accompanying picture shows a corner of the attractive garden back of Vroman's bookstore in Pasadena, where booklovers may take a book and bask in the sunshine. The garden is enclosed by a brick wall against which grape vines and roses grow and at the base of which are many ferns and potted plants. The bench beneath the fig tree, near the trickling fountain, is a very pleasant spot. The garden is entered thru a reading room which is a copy of a seventeenth century library of Spanish design. A quaint iron gate leads the way to the unique outdoor reading room.

VROMAN'S BOOKSTORE GARDEN

Is Retailing Overcrowded?

AN article in the Nation's Business seems to indicate that at least in some fields there are too many retailers. A. E. Dodd, Manager of the Department of Domestic Distribution, of the United States Chamber of Commerce, says that there is one grocery store for every 218 persons in the United States. He estimates that, judging by the family budgets common in the country, the average total sales of a grocer would thus be only $9,400, which certainly would be too small for him to obtain a reasonable living. The weeding out that goes on under such crowded conditions must ultimately be an expense to the community.

That the bookstores are at the extreme other end of such a census list is apparent by any kind of estimate of the number in the country. If, as some estimate, there are about 2,000 full fledged bookstores, that would be one for every 50,000 inhabitants, the average dealer having 10,000 families to draw on. There is still plenty of room for new book shops.

Reception to Oregon Writers

CONTINUING the energetic work that the Gill Company has been carrying on during the past year of book merchandising, there was held in its book department on November 29th and 30th an informal public reception in honor of the Oregon writers. On the evening of the 30th, there was a banquet for the writers and their friends, for which reservations could be had by a limited number. This, following on after Gill's handling of the big reception to Edwin Markham when he returned to his native state this year after an absence of twenty years, shows an appreciation of the value of awakening state pride in authorship.

The Newest Idea in Salesmanship

IN a recent editorial the New York Evening Post comments on the reaction now apparent against the recent ideals of business efficiency. The last paragraphs of the editorial read:

"A counter-current is making itself felt in the literature of the Higher Salesmanship. No one will accuse the popular magazines of antagonizing the appetite for Success. But the popular magazines for some time have been poking fun at the inflated poetics, psychologies, and efficiencies of the science and art of salesmanship. Doubts have been raised about the gospel of the 'cleared desk.' The business executive who never has anything in front of him but a pad of paper on a vast surface of mahogany—well, it is now being intimated that the man who keeps his desk clean by instantly making up his mind probably makes a good many wrong decisions. There is the high-powered specialist on form-letters which keep merchandise moving. It is now being suggested that the specialist might put a little less machine-gun into his style and a little more care into quoting the right prices for the right articles. There is the story—unauthentic, no doubt—of the clerk who walked into the private office and found his employer and his employer's best customer chasing each other around the room. It turned out that both men had learned from the textbooks on salesmanship that in any interview you must keep the other man facing the light and keep your own back to the light. The two were now striving for the preferred position. They compromised by sitting on the window sill.

"Common sense and the sense of humor are in revolt against the aberrations of salesmanship psychology and efficiency psychology with their hair-trigger intuitions, their steel-trap decisions, their subtle developments of personality, their minute readings of character, their conscription of Socrates, Dante, William James, and Elbert Hubbard to help sell floor varnish. The new idea has been to work like mad to make yourself a super-man and then sell things without turning a hair. The old idea was to work like mad trying to sell things. The old idea is coming back."

WILLIAM MELLOR BAINS

Obituary Notes

WILLIAM MELLOR BAINS

WILLIAM MELLOR BAINS, one of the oldest booksellers in Philadelphia, died at home on December 19th, after an illness of six months. He was educated at the Friends Central School, going from there to Claxton, Remson and Hafelfinger, a well-known firm of wholesale booksellers in their day. When this firm failed, he went with the J. B. Lippincott Company. When the Lippincotts sold their retail department to Strawbridge & Clothier, Mr. Bains opened the new book department in that store, remaining until he went in business for himself in 1900. Since then he has carried on a successful business, principally in the library and the school field. His intimate knowledge of the book business made his office a mecca for book lovers from far and near. He was a charter member and treasurer of the Booksellers' Association of Philadelphia. He is survived by a wife and four daughters, and the business will be carried on by Mrs. Lydia B. Bains and Miss Mabel Bains as the active heads. Associated with them will be Richard F. Boggs, who was with Mr. Bains for many years.

ALEXANDER TEIXEIRA DE MATTOS

ALEXANDER TEIXEIRA DE MATTOS died suddenly on December 5th at St. Ives, England. Mr. Teixeira was probably the most distinguished translator of foreign languages of the present generation, and it was his untiring energy and skill, which amounted almost to genius, in translating the thought of foreigners into beautiful English that has given us the classic translations of Maurice Maeterlinck, J. Henri Fabre, the distinguished French naturalist, and

Louis Couperus, the Dutch novelist. He translated books and plays with equal facility from French, Flemish, German, Danish and Dutch.

JOHN BRIGGS

CAPTAIN JOHN BRIGGS, for many years associated with the American Book Company, New York, died at his home on December 28th at the ripe age of eighty-four. He was regularly at his post in the Book Room until about a year ago, when his health began to fail, and on the first of July last he retired from active service. A sketch of his life, with portrait, was printed in the Educational Number of the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY, July 23rd. His start in the book business dates back to the days before the Civil War when he entered the employ of Roe Lockwood & Son. When President Lincoln's call came for troops he joined the 22nd Regiment and went to the front. He continued in the National Guard until 1877, retiring as Captain of F Company. On his return from the war, he clerked for a while with the Lockwoods and then joined the school book house of Ivison, Phinney & Company, which subsequently was merged with the American Book Company. Captain Briggs was active in the various trade associations, being on the Board of Directors of the old Provident Association and a director in its earlier years of the Booksellers' League.

ELKIN MATHEWS

ELKIN MATHEWS, the well known English publisher, died at his home in Chorley Wood, near London, on November 10, age 70 years. Mr. Mathews was the joint-founder with John Lane, of the Bodley Head publishing business in Vigo Street, in 1887. The policy of the firm was in many respects a new departure. The young author with a first book, however "advanced" it might be, found ready consideration, and if his book was accepted and published it appeared with all the advantages of good paper, print and binding. Poets were especially favored, and the Bodley Head might almost have been described as "a nest of singing birds." Many authors who have since become well known owed their first start to Messrs. Elkin Mathews and John Lane. The firm was dissolved in 1894 and the partners formed separate businesses. Mr. Mathews continued on much the same lines, with perhaps a special predilection for belles lettres. Among the well known authors featured in his catalog are R. D. Blackmore, John Drinkwater, W. D. Crauford, M. Hewlett, John Masefield, and S. R. Crockett.

Banquet of the Brotherhood

THE "reg'lar fellers" among the travelers of the booktrade gathered for the thirty-seventh annual banquet of the Brotherhood of Commercial Travelers at the Waldorf-Astoria on Wednesday evening last. The old guard, with a goodly number of the younger set, made a company of nearly one hundred who enjoyed an unusually good, if not a brilliant night. Sumner C. Britton, the toastmaster, was invested with the regulation scarf and gavel as retiring President of the Brotherhood by Brother "Bill" Kelly, who has conducted the ceremony annually, with but a few exceptions, for more than thirty years. The guests of honor who made addresses included Charles Hanson Towne, who told of many humorous incidents of his experience when editor of Smart Set. His advice to would-be-writers was always to be guided by "faith, hope and clarity," and from his knowledge of one class of contributors he was convinced that "poets were born but not paid." He read three of his own poems with fine effect. Joseph C. Lincoln bubbled over with funny stories, including several about printers' errors. One of those related to an item in a country newspaper in England intended to announce that Marie Corelli had retired "to her country house to polish up her novel" but the printer made it read "navel." George S. Chappell, the famous "Dr. Walter E. Traprock" of "The Cruise of the Kawa," was equally delightful in his talk and good stories. All three of the speakers were elected to honorary membership by an enthusiastic vote, and each spoke his appreciation of the compliment.

A very funny "stunt," just before the speaking started, was staged in an unexpected row apparently between two waiters who began punching each other and startling the guests accordingly. When separated they demanded satisfaction in a fight to the finish. It ended in each stripping his clothing to the trunks of a boxer, and then as good a boxing match as one would want to see followed, to the delight of all.

The time honored Secretary of the Brotherhood, John Hovendon, presented his thanks on behalf of the organization to Robert G. Anderson for his cooperation in planning the program of the evening, and to him he gave the credit for one of the best nights the Commercial Travelers have had in recent years.

Chicago Votes for "Home Made" Text Books

AS we go to press, word comes from Chicago that the Board of Education of that city has voted to publish its own textbooks written by its own teachers. This cancels the vote of a week previous fixing adoptions for the next five years as recommended by the Superintendent and teachers. Free textbooks are now in Illinois. The Board claims to be able to save thirty per-cent on the estimate of $1,100,000 for school books in the next five years, in spite of the failure of the plan of "home made" textbooks everywhere else.

Rare Books, Autographs and Prints

ONE of the most interesting of the closing exhibitions of the year was that of a collection of eighteenth century drawings at the Gimpel and Waldenstein Galleries. The drawings reveal the appreciation of the French artist for character frequently with greater effect than the paintings.

The print shops are now pausing to take a breath and change their displays for January exhibitions. There is a feeling abroad that business during the remainder of the season will be livelier than it has been in its earlier months. There will probably be more doing in the auction rooms, as there has been few print sales thus far.

A reader in a clipping agency who has gathered thousands of newspaper clippings denouncing the Fordney Tariff schedule on books says that he has not yet seen a single defence from any source. Every editorial utterance or expression of any kind on the subject has been all in opposition to the bill. This is true of every state in the Union.

An exhibition of water colors and original drawings of the most eminent illustrators of the last century, including William Blake, George Cruikshank, Thomas Rowlandson and John Leech and, also, fine examples of the work of Edmund Dulac, Arthur Rackham and Jack Yeats and other artists of our own time, are on view at the bookshop of James F. Drake, Inc., 4 West Fortieth Street.

The first part of the auction season ending with the holidays will undoubtedly show a loss of business compared with the same period of last year. Prices on the whole, however, have been fairly satisfactory. Of course there has been a contraction of values and there is little of the high spirits of two or three years ago, but after all business is quite as good as has been generally expected.

The well known war poem, "In Flanders Field," by the late Lieut.-Col. John MacCrae, of the Canadian Expeditionary Force, has just been issued as an attractive little book with illuminations by Ernest Clegg, late of the Bedfordshire Regiment, by the Rudge Press of Mount Vernon. The illuminations are in the style of the old missals and all of the details of the little book including the printing are excellently done. A preface by Bishop Manning briefly recounts the story of Colonel MacCrae's life.

There are many collections on special subjects scattered broadcast over the country that are comparatively unknown. On the top floor of an old building in Montgomery Street in Jersey City is the miscellaneous dramatic collection of William A. Hildebrand. Here it is said are 15,000 books and pamphlets, hundreds of scrap books, portraits and signed photographs of actors, rare lithographs and thousands of play bills and newspaper clippings. Several rooms are crowded with the collection. There is a great deal of material relating to Jenny Lind and her work and it was in one of these rooms that the Jenny Lind Memorial Association was organized. Mr. Hildebrand who brought all of these treasures together was formerly librarian of the New York Historical Society.

Records and mementoes of Theodore Roosevelt will be shown in the great exhibition room of the New York Public Library beginning on January 6, the third anniversary of Colonel Roosevelt's death. The display will be under the joint auspices of the New York Public Library and the Roosevelt Memorial Association. This will be the most interesting and striking thing of the sort that has ever been assembled in this country about the life and personality of any individual. It will be arranged chronologically and will consist of manuscripts, letters, diaries, photographs, cartoons and campaign material of all descriptions; first editions of all of Col. Roosevelt's works, and certain rare manuscript material such as his ranch ledger and the minutes of the first meeting of the cattlemen of Western Dakota, assembled by him. Mrs. Roosevelt has lent the association for the exhibit a collection of the diaries which Colonel Roosevelt kept, beginning with a journal which he filled as a homesick boy in Europe in 1869 and ending with the hunting record he kept in Brazil in 1914. She is also lending the records he made as a naturalist in Egypt in 1872 and the catalog of the "Roosevelt Museum" which he conducted in New York on his return. These mementoes will be on view for three months.

The collection of laws of New York and other American Colonies of Great Britain owned by Russel Benedict of Brooklyn, justice of the Supreme Court, will be sold at the American Art Galleries in February. It includes the acts and laws of the Colony and State of New York, with revisions, session laws and ordinances of the City and State until 1800. The number of imprints by early New York printers, especially by William Bradford the first New York printer, is remarkable. There are twenty-four of his imprints and an autograph letter signed by him; sixteen of Hugh Caine, fifteen of James Parker, and twenty-seven by Peter Zenger. Among the Massachusetts items is "General Laws and Liberties" printed in 1675 by Samuel Green, of which only five copies are known. The Rhode Island items include "Acts and Laws" printed by the Widow Franklin in 1745. The "Acts of the General Assembly" of New Jersey printed by Bradford in Philadelphia in 1732 has his signature on the title. The Pennsylvania lots comprise books printed by Andrew Bradford and Benjamin Franklin.

There are also rare lots printed in North Carolina, South Carolina and New Hampshire. The "Constitution of the United States," with certificate of adoption by the Connecticut Convention printed in 1781 is the only copy known. The sale will be one of the most important in its special field ever held in this country.

Professor Alois Brandl, head of the English department of the University of Berlin, declares that the world may have lost the greatest of the writings of Shakespeare. He supports his theory by what is said to be hitherto unnoticed evidence found in a pamphlet in the British Museum published in 1729 whose author is believed to be John Roberts. Here it is stated that Shakespeare left two trunks filled with loose papers and manuscripts which were thrown about a garret room and were the property of an uneducated baker of Warwick who married one of the poet's descendants. They were destroyed when Warwick was razed by a fire. Roberts says that these writings came to the special knowledge of "the late Sir William Bishop" who was intimately acquainted in the circles in which Shakespeare moved. Many of the statements in this pamphlet have been verified and they tend to give the color of truth to it generally. "Might it not be," Professor Brandl is reported to have said, "that Shakespeare did his best writing at the last! He was relieved of catering to the box office and public taste—relieved, too, of a clash with censorship. He was free to write as his genius dictated. It is tempting to imagine the scope of what Shakespeare in his dignity and maturity and untrammelled by any thing but artistic considerations might have placed on paper."

President Harding, at the suggestion of Secretary Hughes, has issued an executive order transferring from the State Department to the Library of Congress a number of precious historical documents, including the Articles of Confederation, the journal of the convention that framed the Constitution of the United States, Jefferson's rough draft of the Declaration of Independence, James Madison's notes on the debates in the Constitutional Convention, a number of Continental Congress papers, the Franklin papers, the Jefferson papers and Madison papers. In 1903 President Roosevelt ordered the transfer to the Library of Congress of the historical papers which had been placed in the State Department before there was any other depository suitable for them, and the major part of the great Jefferson, Madison, Hamilton, Franklin and Monroe collections and the papers of the Continental Congress were then turned over to the Library. President Roosevelt's order, however, permitted the State Department to make a selection of papers which it retained because they were supposed to have special reference to foreign affairs and to the formation of the Constitution. These are the papers which have been added to the main collection of which they are a part. The president recently ordered that the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution be transferred to the Library of Congress and this led the way to the new executive order. The Manuscript Division of the Library of Congress, which now has one of the largest collections of historical manuscripts in the world, is thought to be the most safe and fitting place for these papers and the action taken at the Secretary of State's suggestion will, it is believed, be welcomed by historical students and approved generally.

CLEMENT K. Shorter, in a recent number of the London Sphere, says: "I have received first number of The Bookman's Journal in its new form as a monthly magazine. On the whole I count The Bookman's Journal a publication which may well justify its existence. I sincerely hope it will prove successful. Typographically, at any rate, it is beyond the criticism even of the most exigent mind."

PERCY HAMMOND recently, in his book column of the New York Tribune, quoted from E. V. Lucas' comments on the movies in "Roving East and Roving West." Mr. Lucas says "that the novelist who can write a living book is a traitor to his art and conscience if he prefers the easy money of the film." Yet he continues that even Dickens and Thackeray would have been frail if they had been beckoned to sin by Mr. Laskey's millions. "David Copperfield" and "Vanity Fair" would not have been written as an endowment to millions of grateful readers in perpetuity, but as plots for the immediate necessity of the picture palaces.

Jackson Gregory's new book is going to go way beyond any of his previous successes

THE EVERLASTING WHISPER

A TALE OF THE CALIFORNIA SIERRAS
IN THE PRESENT DAY

Gregory, the author of JUDITH OF BLUE LAKE RANCH and MAN TO MAN, has been building steadily for a big success.

This is it!

It has a gripping, absolutely original plot.

It has the sweep and beauty of the great California wilderness — the breath of nature stirs its pages.

And it has a title which — you'll have to admit it — takes hold on the imagination.
